

Since 1997, ie since its adoption, the constitution is the center around which social and political life is organized in Poland. Politicians increasingly rely on the Basic Law to justify their decisions. The social sphere is also increasingly using the argument from Constitution to criticize politicians and their decisions. On the other hand, the constitutional courts are gaining a bigger impact on the political life in our state. This is not only characteristic for Poland but "the fight for constitutions" could be found in the whole of Central and Eastern Europe.
